Role of Ca<sup>2+</sup>/calmodulin-dependent protein kinase II in erythroid differentiation induced by human gamma-globulin in K562 cells. In order to clarify the role of Ca<sup>2+</sup>/calmodulin-dependent protein kinase II (CaM kinase II) in erythroid differentiation induced by human gamma-globulin (hGG), we have used specific inhibitors against CaM kinase II and the effect of down-regulation of the expression of CaM kinase II on hGG-induced erythroid differentiation. Treatment of K562 cells with hGG induced erythroid differentiation accompanied by marked increase in the expression of erythroid-specific proteins such as hemoglobin and glycophorin. As to the effect of CaM kinase II inhibitors, KN-62 (KN) and KN-92 (KN-92) showed little effect on hGG-induced erythroid differentiation. However, KN-92 inhibited the hGG-induced increase in glycophorin expression, while KN only inhibited the hGG-induced increase in hemoglobin expression. To examine the effect of down-regulation of CaM kinase II on hGG-induced erythroid differentiation, K562 cells were stably transfected with a dominant-negative mutant of CaM kinase II (DN) and transfected cells were selected by neomycin. Then the effect of DN on hGG-induced erythroid differentiation was examined. In comparison with wild-type K562 cells, transfected cells of the Ca
